	Lived two doors from the Trooper's barrack when they were in the Dyke Roller rink. She says she passed the barracks on her way to work. A boy friend had given her candy which she was eating on her way to work and she stopped to talk to the troopers Dalmatian when W. W. came out reading a paper held up before his face. A few days later he called the house and asked if she would go to the Fair. She said she probably would. WW asked if she would come to the barracks to pick up her passes of should he bring them over. She said she would send her father for them. She went to the Fair with friends and came home in the patrol car with WW to the amusement of the neighbors. By the time the new barracks were built she was engaged and had a front seat at the dedication, and dinner at the Hotel Richmond with all the big shots from Albany. That was a dazzling experience for her. Told on November 12, 1981. The news item when WW came said he was a bachelor.
