Trietley, Harry L.	Was said to be an atheist, and was a close friend of Ralph Hutton, the Episcopal rector. During Trietley's last illness, Hutton visited him just before he died. Hutton said later that Trietley opened his eyes and said, "It's beautiful over there." So Herbert Redshaw says. Harry's brother Clarence was called "Slim" and Redshaw says he was flakey. So was the father. Slim worked for Standard Oil Company, then after a misunderstanding with them, for another oil company. Finally he went to California where, Redshaw believes, he died. Told to me by Redshaw.	no date

	Trojan loaders to be on exhibit at the Genesee & Me Mall Show, Friday and Saturday. Began as a locomotive repair shop. In 1930, F. W. Allan & Sons formed Contractor's Machinery Co. to market and manufacture road building equipment. (Early days [they] shared quarters with the Town of Batavia Streets Dept.) Thru 300 repaired locomotives - made snowplows, agriculture tractors, sheeps foot rolls, small tractor blades for scraping. Developed Trojan Road Patrol - International tractor fitted with a framework that allowed the attachment of a road grader blade. In WWII they made PT boat cradles, submarine and torpedo netting, mine-sweeping gear. At the end of the war they developed a shovel-type loader - a tractor with the driver facing the rear and a bucket added. This developed into the front-end bucket loader and four-wheel tractor shovels. Expanded in 1957 when sold to Yale and Towne Mfg. Co. In November 1979 bought by Fanne-Werke, a German based manufacturer of off-road vehicles and equipment. It was incorporated under the name Trojan Industries.	11-3-1981
